In the village of Tysobyken, Berehiv district, Transcarpathian region, there is the Zatytsia Museum of Local History, which was opened in the 1970s in the neo-classical building of the Palace of Counts Fogoroshiv in 1895. Nearby is a picturesque county park with sycamore and linden trees. The exposition is dedicated to the life of the Hungarian-speaking population of the area. The most interesting in the museum are the exhibitions of folk ceramics, Viennese Baroque furniture and souvenirs. The museum has a conference hall for 50 people. There is also an opportunity to organize folklore evenings. In the courtyard of the museum is a small scansen, where you can see several ancient buildings.
